Founded in 1941 as Potomac's first radio station, WNTC has become a popular Charleston radio-student activity.

WNTC now serves both the Charleston and State College of Education campuses from its central station on the third floor of South Hall. Transmission is accomplished by twelve current transmitters operating from other locations on the campuses.

Since its start in the attic of the now retired President's Building, WNTC has been a regularly advancing organization inspired by the sense of service to the students. All students from Charleston or the State College of Education who are interested in any aspect of radio broadcasting will find a place to display their talents at WNTC. Operating engineers, sports and regular announcers, editors, publicity men, technical engineers, along with many others are given a chance to learn and develop their abilities and learn new skills.

WNTC, a vigorously active and still growing organization, has taken its place as one of the most rewarding student activities of the "Northern Twin Colleges."
